Central Lutheran School's 50th Anniversary

Train up a child in the way he should go; even when he is old he will not depart from it.

~ Proverbs 22:6

On Saturday April 29th at 2pm, Central Lutheran School will be celebrating 50 years in Christian education with a worship service, followed by a meal and fellowship at the school. We hope this event will provide an opportunity for our alumni students, faculty and staff, and their families, the opportunity to reconnect with each other and reminisce on the wonderful legacy of faith and love that has been built through the blessing of Central Lutheran School.

To purchase tickets for the meal ($10 per person for age 6 and up), please go to <http://cls50years.org> to purchase online, or contact the CLS office to purchase with cash or check. Tickets will also be sold in the local churches on various Sundays throughout the month of March, and early April. The order form is attached.

Not interested in the meal? The worship service is open to anyone, no tickets needed. CLS will also be publishing a commemorative DVD, which will include a recording of the worship service, footage of our principal's roundtable discussing the CLS history throughout the years, and many, many photos from all 50 years of the school's history. Student, staff, faculty or other affiliation to CLS – please go to <http://cls50years.org> to update your contact information with us, so we can keep our mailing list up to date.

Please contact the CLS office if you have any questions, 223-5271.

Social Media Rules for Elementary-Aged Kids

Elementary school-aged kids like to play in online worlds, and for most kids in this age group, this will be the extent of their online social lives. These online worlds - like Club Penguin or Poptropica - are closed environments where kids can play games, meet friends, and let their imaginations run free. The challenge for parents is helping kids find a balance between playing online and enjoying plenty of offline family and social time. And, even though virtual worlds have rules, some kids can find ways around them, so discussing how to deal with bad behavior ahead of time can be helpful for kids and parents.

Here are some basic social media rules to discuss with your children:

- Set up accounts together. By creating usernames and passwords together, you can begin walking kids through the basics of safe and appropriate online behavior.
- If you wouldn't let you kids have unsupervised play dates, don't let them go online by themselves. Remember, the social skills they bring to online worlds are the same ones they have (or don't have) in real life.
- Do your homework. Make sure you check out sites before you let your kids go online, and don't settle for the most popular social sites; look around for ones that appeal to your kid's interests or have an educational angle.
- Set time limits. And make sure online play is balanced with offline play.
- Establish codes of conduct. A good rule of thumb: if you kids wouldn't say something to someone's face (or in the presence of an adult), they shouldn't say it online.
- Show kids how to flag inappropriate conduct. It's easy for parents to learn how to use the flagging feature, and it's important to show your kids how to use it, too. Explain that this is a healthy way to keep social-networking sites safe and fun for everyone.
- Make sure your children never share their passwords. Often kids will give other children their passwords for help in a game. Explain that giving away a password is like giving someone a part of your identity.
- Talk about money and what it means to your family. Some sites rely on users to buy extras. Don't let a social-networking site that needs customer loyalty to be profitable teach your kids about earning, saving, and spending. Explain your own values.
- Keep the computer in a central place. This will let you monitor your child's online life.
